OFR CHINESE VISITORS.

THE EMBASSY AT NIBLO'S.

Probably not the least attraction at Niblo's Theater on Saturday evening, to a large number of the spectators, was the presence of Minister Burlingame and his suite, accompanied by the ten distinguished gentlemen his suite, accompanied by the ten distinguished gentlemen from Pekin forming a portion of the embassy. The party occupied front seats in the parquette circle, which had been decorated for the occasion—the American and and Chinese ensigns twining amicably in broad featoons everhead, and the same colors being also displayed on the outside of the lower railing. Of course, the Orientals, with their loose, embroidered garments, their inverted pork-pie hats, gathered at the summit with an exaggerated glass bead, their flowing pigtails, and their placid countenances, were the observed of all observers in the intervals between acts; and it was both curious and interesting to watch the effect produced upon them by the entertainment so novel to them. Minister Burlingame quitted the theater at the close of the second act, in order to meet an engagement at the Century Club; but the absorbed, delighted, and bewildered autipodeans retained their seats, as if spell-bound, until the last twinkle of the dance and the last clash of the music had died away. The effect of the ballet upon these children of the Sum was not the same. While Messrs. Tung, Kwei, and Zea preserved the true Mandarin dignity throughout, with only an occasional smile of approval illuminating their celestial stellity. But Mr. Tu signified his admi-Sim was not the same. While Messrs, Tung, Kwe, and Zen preserved the true Mandarin dignity throughout, with only an occasional smile of approval illuminating their eclestial stohidity, little Mr. Tug signified his admiration by such exuberant and incessant applause with his hands and feet as to cheft an occasional word of caution from Messrs. The and Lian, who sat on either side of him. As for Messrs. Coong and Kang, they sat for the entire evening, each with a pair of operaglasses leveled at the stage, which they hardly removed from their eyes once during the performance, while their mouths indicated a chrome state of gaping wonder. Many of the spectacular features must have recalled forcibly to their minds the drama in their own flowery kingdom, where the explosion of the entertainment, but the dancing was to them the absorbing attraction. As, one after another, the sensions beauties of the ballet were unfolded before their intoxicated gaze, they became more and more expressive of their varied emotions. At the conclusion of the performance the mandarins, in talking together, expressed themselves highly pleased with this phase of barbarian entertainments, and the subsequent dreams of all were doubtless peopled with visions of a decidedly luxurious character.

In 1865 and 1866 certain creditors recovered judgments against him, which were returned unsatisfied. These creditors proved their debts in bankruptcy, and then commenced a suit against the bankrupt and his wife, alleging that he had conveyed to her a house and lot of a greater value than the amount of their claims, and asking that the wife be declared trustee thereof for the purpose of satisfying their claims, or that a receiver be appointed, the property sold, and their claims satisfied out of the proceeds. An order was granted staying all proceedings in this suit until the question of the bankrupt's discharge had been determined. The creditors then applied to set aside that order. The Court demod this motion, holding that the creditors, having proved their debts, waived their right to bring this suit, and that the property conveyed by fraud passes into the lands of the assignee in bankruptcy for the benefit of all the creditors. efit of all the creditors.
